

Paper Prototyping Stage

In this paper prototype, I created screens for all of the different tasks that the user will be interacting with in my website called "The Wager." This website will not have many screens, but rather it will have different options available on one screen. More specifically, it will allow for the user to choose details such as location, job title, and year(s) of experience to change the results on the map.

Paper prototyping was very successful for me. It brought to light the fact that people wanted to see statistics much more than just a mere profile and location of the selected points. From this advice, I was able to gather that I should integrate a scatterplot to show how one person stands among the rest, and base that on the person's experience level to make it simple to understand.

